Northrop Grumman Promotes Mike Marlow to Director of Newport News Industrial

NEWPORT NEWS – June 5, 2006 – Northrop Grumman Corporation (NYSE: NOC) has promoted Mike Marlow to director of Newport News Industrial Corporation (NNI), a company within Northrop Grumman’s Newport News sector. NNI ranks among the nation's leading specialty service contractors, focusing its skills primarily on valve and boiler water circulating pump services.

In his new position, Marlow will be responsible for all operations of NNI, the development of new business, and supporting a wide range of shipyard tasks. He reports to Bob Gunter, senior vice president of operations at Northrop Grumman Newport News.

“Mike's background and experiences with nuclear operations from previous assignments in the Navy and General Electric make him well suited for this position,” Gunter said.

Marlow began his career at Newport News in 1996 as director of business development and has held positions in marketing and product development and NNI field operations. Before beginning his career with Newport News, Marlow held management positions with Westinghouse and General Electric and is also a former U.S. Navy submariner.

Marlow earned a bachelor’s degree in nuclear technology from Excelsior College. He resides in Poquoson, Va.
